AFA Ambassador Program Selects 41 Student Leaders: Connecting Students to the Future of Agriculture

Kansas City, MO — January 20, 2025 — The Agriculture Future of America (AFA) Ambassador Program equips ambitious students to shape the future of the agriculture industry. This year, 41 student leaders representing campuses nationwide were selected to serve as a bridge between AFA and the next generation of agricultural professionals.

“I am looking forward to connecting with students from all backgrounds and helping them feel welcomed and confident as they explore agriculture and the opportunities within AFA,” said Isla Gooch, Agriculture Technology Management and Education student at The University of Arizona and returning AFA Ambassador. “Serving as an ambassador has depend my engagement on campus, strengthened my leadership skills, allowing me to better engage in agricultural opportunities.”

As Ambassadors, students work with AFA to set goals and get personalized coaching to develop creative outreach strategies to achieve these goals. Designed for student leaders who believe in the power of connection, the AFA Ambassador Program empowers real-world leadership, marketing mindsets and industry engagement.

“The Ambassador Program has been a signature part of the CHS Foundation's support because we've seen the impressive growth in both AFA and individuals when students are empowered to become campus leaders,” said Megan Wolle, president, CHS Foundation. “Congratulations to this year's Ambassador Team!”

The Ambassador Program is made possible through the continued partnership of the CHS Foundation. The CHS Foundation has invested nearly $2 million since 2011 to expand the Ambassador experience, helping it grow to its largest class yet. This investment supports scholarships, training and travel while opening doors for students to access meaningful leadership development opportunities.
