REACH SCIP

Regulation (EC) No. 1907/2006 (REACH), which was enacted on 1 July 2006 and came into force on 1 June 2007, now requires all European companies to implement the evaluation, approval and registration of chemicals.

The new REACH Regulation aims to regulate all chemical substances (raw materials and compounds) handled and sold in Europe in quantities exceeding 1 tonne per year (for each hazardous substance and compound) with important consequences for the future activities of importers and manufacturers.

The REACH Regulation requires industry to take great responsibility for the risks of chemicals by providing correct safety information to end users.
At the same time, it requires the European Community to take further measures on substances of very high concern for which additional action may be required across Europe.
REACH has established the European Chemicals Agency (ECHA), which has a central role in coordinating and executing all the relevant processes.

In general, manufacturers and importers are required to verify the characteristics of substances and provide all the necessary information for their registration, but companies that use these substances will also play an important role.

REACH requires strong cooperation among all the players of the supply chain and provides precise provisions on collaboration and information exchange between companies.
Manufacturers or importers are required to provide their downstream users with all the information they need for safe use of substances and request at the same time the necessary upstream information from their suppliers.
Classification, labelling and safety data sheets can be used to achieve this, as required.

Reach for metal alloys

The REACH Regulation refers to alloys as "special mixtures" (recital no. 31, Annex I (0.11), as amended by EC Regulation no. 1272/2008). Therefore, for the purposes of REACH, an alloy will have to be treated in the same way as blends, which means that the alloy as such is not subject to registration, but the elements of the alloy are, regardless of the production process.
However, components that are not relevant to the properties of the alloy should be considered as impurities (they are part of a substance in the mixture) and therefore do not need to be registered separately.
The REACH regulation defines an article as "an object which is given, during production, a particular shape, surface or design which determines its function to a greater extent than its chemical composition".

Companies supplying articles containing substances of very high concern (SVHC) on the candidate list in a concentration above 0.1% weight by weight (w/w) on the European market are required to submit information on these articles to ECHA as from 5 January 2021.

SCIP is the database for information on potentially hazardous substances in articles as such or in complex objects (products) established under the Waste Framework Directive (WFD)

The SCIP database ensures that information on articles containing substances on the candidate list is available throughout the life cycle of products and materials, including the final stage when they become waste. The information in the database is thus made available to waste treatment operators and consumers.

The articles below contain SVHC substances> 0.1%, therefore for the last modification of article 33 of the REACH Regulation, they were notify in the SCIP database with the following codes
